

Webharvesters markets Foroso technology in the US and Canada

New North American Partner for Foroso Communications

Munich, June 18, 2003 – Webharvesters Inc. and Foroso Communications announce a new partnership for North America. Foroso's Real-time Enterprise Collaboration technologies will be marketed by Webharvesters in the US and Canada.

Webharvesters Inc, based in New York, offers products and services to enable large organizations to reap a harvest from the years of investment they have made in Internet technology. To support this mission, Webharvesters licensed Foroso's technology and will offer it under its own "e-ttend" brand.

"WebEx and a number of other companies already offer competitive products in the US market", states Michael Sachs, CEO of Webharvesters. "But none is as easy to use and can offer a similar set of features at a comparable cost. E-ttend will appeal to businesses more focused on performance and value than the brand name of their provider, and we therefore anticipate a successful launch of the Foroso technology in the US and Canada".

"Our business depends very much on excellent partnerships. Webharvesters extends our partner program and enables us to also address additional markets outside of Europe", says Franz Buchenberger, President and CEO of Foroso Communications. "We are impressed by WebHarvesters enthusiastic and competent market approach and look forward to a long-term relationship".

Webharvesters offers solutions designed to bring real returns to its clients by “harvesting” their existing investments in technology. E-tend offers significant ease-of-use and price advantages over competing products in the on-line meetings market.
