

PMH offers Internet-based project management seminars

Foroso Communications facilitates live training for PMH seminars

Munich, August 6, 2002 – Foroso Communications provides the technology for the Internet-based project management seminars of PMH Projektmanagement Services. At these seminars, participants learn how to define project objectives, how to structure and manage projects, and how to deal with typical problem areas.

Foroso Communications, a leading vendor of Real-Time Enterprise Collaboration products, provides with Foroso Training Center™ the platform for “virtual classrooms” on the Internet.

Traditional E-Learning solutions are restricted to self study and temporary coaching. Participants at the PMH seminars are permanently connected with the trainer and work jointly and interactively with the trainer and other participants.

The essential advantage stems from the combination of presence seminars with the cost effectiveness of an Internet platform. This means significant cost savings compared to traditional seminars (typically up to 50%, and even more with international participants). There is no cost at all for travel, hotel, seminar facilities, and materials.

During the seminar, various methods are used such as lectures, discussions (with voice communication for the trainer, text chat for participants), presentations (participants can temporarily act as presenters), brainstorming, moderation cards, and group exercises in smaller teams.

„It is important for our participants that the underlying technology is easy to deal with”, says Horst Harrant, managing director of PMH. „Valuable seminar time must not be wasted on software installation, firewall issues, and technology training, but must be fully available for the content of the seminar. Foroso is the ideal partner for us, since there is no other product on the market that is as easy to use.”

„PMH has extensive experience with seminars and understands how to effectively train students”, states Franz Buchenberger, CEO and President of Foroso Communications. „We are pleased to contribute to an effective usage of the time of all participants”.
